

Cats are small, carnivorous mammals that are commonly kept as pets. They belong to the family Felidae.

Domestic cats are known for their agility, curiosity, and independence. They have been living alongside humans for thousands of years.

Cats are obligate carnivores, meaning their diet primarily consists of meat. They require nutrients such as taurine, vitamin A, and arachidonic acid, which are found in animal tissues.

A typical domestic cat sleeps between 12 to 16 hours a day. Kittens and older cats may sleep even longer.

Cats purr for several reasons. While purring is often associated with contentment, cats may also purr when they are anxious, injured, or seeking comfort.

Cats communicate through vocalizations such as meowing, hissing, and growling, as well as through body language like tail movement and ear positioning.

A healthy domestic cat typically lives between 12 to 18 years, though some cats can live into their early twenties with proper care.

Cats have retractable claws that help them hunt prey and climb. Scratching is a natural behavior that helps maintain claw health.

Regular veterinary checkups, a balanced diet, and a safe environment contribute to a cat's overall health and well-being.